near two hours to-day, who was drawing a miniature pleture of me for Mrs. Washington."

"Walked in the afternoon and sat about two o'clock for Madam de Brehan, to complete a miniature profile of me which she had begun from memory, and which she had made exceed-ingly like the original."

This lady was the sister of the Count de Moustier, the French Minister to the United States, and with her son, accompanied her brother to this country. They all visited Mount Vernon in 1788. After their return to France, her minia- 53-tf ture profile was engraved, and proof impressions of it sent by the Count to General Washington. The original of it appears also to have been intended by Madame de Brehan (or Brienne) for Mrs. Washington.

An original likeness of Washington, from a (Successor to R. Coady & Co...) Shipping and Commission Mer miniature by Archibald Robertson painted in References: 1792, forms the vignette to the present edition of the Diary. Robertson came to this country in the Spring of 1791, at the instance of the Earl of Buchan, bringing with him, as a present to Washington from the Earl, a box made of the wood of the oak-tree which sheltered Wallace after the battle of Falkirk. No impression of this miniature by Robertson had ever been made, before it was approved in a second of the property of the leading articles in the Provision and Ship Chandlery line, kept constantly on hand and for sale at low rates. From long experience in every matter concerning Whaleships, he is prepared to offer superior facilities to masters and owners entrusting their luminess to his charge. before it was engraved in wood for the present

In a manuscript left by Mr. Robertson (from which an extract has been kindly furnished to me by Mr. T. W. C. Moore) he says-

"The first sitting for the original miniature of General and Mrs. Washington were in Philadelphia toward the end of December 1791 and finished in January 1792. In the succeeding month of April, the portrait (in oil) of Washington for Lord Buchan was dispatched by Col. Lear, then on a mission to Europe. His Lordship afterwards expressed his high satisfaction in a letter of thanks to the artist. The original miniatures he (the artist) retains in his own possession, and intends them to remain in his family an heir-loom and memorial of his veneration for the great and successful champion of American Liberty."

It is evident on an inspection of this likeness of Washington, that it was painted before he had begun to wear artificial teeth. The eye, also, I am told, is of a lighter blue than the eye in Stuart's portrait. The venerable Colonel Trumbull, in an article in the Atlantic Magazine of

"If we wish to behold Washington, when he began to wane in his latter years, when he had lost his teeth, but with full vivacity and vigor of eye, looking at the spectator, we must be-hold Robertson's portrait of him."

These interesting miniatures of General and Mrs. Washington are now in the possession of IMPORTERS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, the grand-daughter of the artist, Miss A. Robertson of New York, who two or three years ago kindly permitted a few photographic copies of them to be taken, for a pair of which I am indebted to the courtesy of Mr. Moore. Being mounted as a brooch the miniature of the General has somewhat faded by exposure to solar light, and it is not impossible that the lighter blue of the eve may be accounted for in that way. It is p. c. waterman. scarcely possible that a colorist like Stuart, at the meridian of his power, should have failed in that respect.

In the manuscript above referred to, Mr. Robertson gives an interesting account of the nervous agitation he experienced, on approaching General Washington. It is one among the numberless facts showing the awe which was felt in his presence. After speaking of his agitation and the kind attempts of Washington to overcome it, he proceeds:

"The General, not finding his efforts altogether successful, introduced me to Mrs. Washington, whose easy, polished, and familiar gaiety and ceaseless cheerfulness almost accomplished, a cure. Another effort of the President to compose his guest was at a family dinner-party, at which the General, contrary to his usual habits, engrossed most of the conversation, and so delighted the company with humorous anecdotes, that he completely set the table in a roar."

this article, to extract some of the more interesting portions of the Diary, but their remains too little space for that purpose, and its fulfilment must be deferred. It may not be inappropriate to this description of Robertson's miniature which serves as a vignette to the remarks introductory to the Diary, to observe that Mr. Carson Brevoort is also the possessor of the original por-trait of Washington by Pine. This painting which, if I am not mistaken, has never been copied nor engraved, is one of extreme value. I hope at some future time, with the permission of the liberal proprietor, to have it in my power to offer the readers of the Ledger an accurate de-scription of it. It is the portrait with reference der of things, that the members of the first to which Washington gives the famous good nasassembled too slowly to form a quorum | tured but somewhat plaintive account of the heavy drafts upon his time, required to satisfy the demands for his likeness. It is in the follow-street New York, on the 30th of that month. I course of the summer, the President was down by the most severe illness he had ever a larger. He was confined to his bed for six attended by Dr. Bard, a physician of the treputation both professional and personal, that I was a satisfactory as thought, under Providence, by his judiant devoted attentions, to have saved the us life confided to his care. General Washand a never entirely recovered from the effects of task.

The strength of the twashington to Francis Hopkinson, Esq.

North Vernon, May 16, 1785.

Dear Sig—In for a penny in for a pound, is an old adage. I am so hackneyed to the touches of the painter's pencil, that I am altogether at their beck; and sit, "like Patience on a Monument," whilst they are delineating the lines of my face. It is a proof among many others, of what habit and custom can accomplish. At first I was as impatient at the request, and as restive under the operation, as a colt is under the saddle. The next time I submitted very reluctantly, but with less flouncing. Now, no dray-horse moves more readily to his thill, than I to the painter's chair. It may easily be conceived, therefore, that I yields, a ready obedience to your request and to the views of Mr. Pine.

Letters from England recommendatory of this gentleman came to my hands previous to his arrival; not only as an artist of genius and taste, but as one who had shown a very friendly disposition towards this country, for which it seems he had been marked.

It gave me pleasure to hear from you. I shall always feel an interest in your happiness, and with Mrs. Washington's compliments and best wishes joined to my own for Mrs. Hopkinson and yourself, I am, &c.

I venture to subjoin, by way of comparison, an original letter of the Duke of Wellington on a similar subject, in reply to an application which I made to him in behalf of our countryman, Mr.
Inman. I am glad to be able to add, that a short lainies have disgraced the annals of commerce. Having made a voyage to the Canaries in 1447, he was dissatisfied with the cargo he procured, and by way of indemnification, seized twenty of the natives of Gomera, who had assisted him, and brought them as slaves to Portugal. Prince Henry, however, resented this outrage; and after giving the captives some valuable presents of clothes, restored them to freedom and their native country.

London.—London contains thirty-four thousand houses, which, if placed in a row, would extend from New York to Cincinnati; and the population is such that if put in marching order, two abreast, the procession would reach a length of six hundred and seventy miles, and at ordinary walking speed, would take nine days and nine nights in passing. Of this vast concourse, six thousand are prison convicts, four thousand lost women, that have bartered their body and soul for daily bread, thirty-five thousand professional beggars, and ninety thousand needle
